

Above - photo of the Florence Little Theatre Guild building at the former Florence Army Air Field, taken pre-1968, before FLT moved to their new bldg on Cashua Road. (Photo courtesy, Florence Little Theatre)

Right - photo of the FAAF Theatre. The base theatre was used for screening training and recreational films for Army personnel. It was located on the northeast section of the air field. (Collection, Florence Museum Board of Trustees)

Pleasing Announcement

The Florence Morning News notes with pleasure the acquirement by the Florence Little Theatre Guild of the theater at the air base as its own permanent theater. We note, too, with equal pleasure the vigorous campaign be currently promoted for sufficient Little Theater memberships to place this organization on a sound and permanent local footing. As we have indicated before in these columns, this is one of numerous contemporary indications that Florence is coming of age culturally.

With a theater they can call their own and with enthusiastic and talented cast personnel, this organization, with the proper supporting membership, should be in excellent situation to render a distinctive type of cultural entertainment to Florence audiences.
